

BSc (Hons) Construction and the Built Environment (Building Surveying)

This apprenticeship is an ideal opportunity for both existing and new entrants to the construction industry who are seeking a career in Building Surveying.

RGU works together with employers to formalise, fine tune and develop the apprentice's experiences and enhance their skills to produce effective and dynamic construction professionals to work in a highly diverse and challenging multi disciplinary industry.

Apprenticeship Highlights

This apprenticeship develops the professional skills and experience in the Building Surveying disciplines of property management, building pathology sustainability and heritage and conservation, with a client led professional focus.

The apprenticeship integrates theory and practice from the outset to provide a range of practical skills for the delivery of construction projects and management of commercial and residential properties.

Apprentices will be involved in assessing project commercial viability, solving design, technical and construction problems, managing work activities and resources to provide solutions to managing property assets.

Graduates of the apprenticeship may embark on a range of career pathways including working with private practices, local authorities, and heritage bodies delivering professional services.

The course has been awarded Accredited Centre status by the Chartered Institute of Building (CIOB)
